Employee dedication, culture, product innovation and quality cited

POWAY, Calif. – August 9 , 2006 – HM Electronics Inc. (HME) has announced the commemoration of its 35th anniversary providing wireless audio systems to the quick service restaurant and professional audio markets. When asked to reveal the secret of HME's long running success, Founder and Chairman Harrison Miyahira said, "It's the dedication of our employees, family oriented culture, innovative products, and an uncompromising commitment to quality and service."

Miyahira opened the doors of HM Electronics Inc. (HME) in 1971, unveiling its first product, the professional wireless microphone system for the entertainment and audio industry. Under Miyahira's leadership, HME quickly captured 65% of the market with its innovative design. In 1984, HME pioneered the first wireless drive-thru audio system for quick service restaurants, again capturing the leadership position in the market.

Through continuous innovation, HME continues to be the leader in both the quick service restaurant and pro audio industries. Quick service customers include but are not limited to McDonald's, Burger King, Wendy's, Taco Bell, KFC, In-N-Out, and Jack-in-the-Box. Professional audio customers include all of the major television network studios, and most of the theatrical venues across the United States.

In 2006, HME was named one of San Diego's Best Places to Work by the San Diego Business Journal. "Our people and our products make HME the success it is today," noted our CEO Chuck Miyahira.

HME provides products to over 80 countries and has installed more than 50,000 systems worldwide. "The company's success lies in meeting the evolving needs of customers and the competitive spirit that drives everyone at HME to be the best" says Miyahira.
